Aging World:

The Aging World Anil Bagchi, 2005 The world is full of disparities where graying appears as a new social element The demographic change along with the differences in wealth and knowledge will greatly influence the future Globalization will be faster and the knowledge network stronger The slender family and the empty home will see growth of new human emotions which will break away from the confines of biological compulsions Remaining in touch with the planetary network will be the way of the future man Working for the network will be his purpose of life The Aging World is an exploration of the developing challenge The future will not happen it will have to be created in the close world The billion strong elderly will have to join the mainstream economy as the age integrated society will not afford their leisure Prof Ranjit Kumar Chandra the noted immunologist writes Humans are complex organisms their evolution is a result of complex interactions of genes and environment Bagchi has attempted the almost impossible task of looking at the interplay of history demography macroeconomics and sociology and its impact on the aging of world populations His analyses appear convincing It will be interesting to watch how his predictions will unfold in reality

U.S. Development Policy in an Aging World Richard Jackson, Reimar Macaranas, Tobias Peter, 2013-06-21 The demographic transformation sweeping the emerging world has profound implications for U S development policy The challenge is no longer helping countries overcome the obstacles to development posed by high birthrates and rapid population growth but leveraging the opportunities created by falling birthrates and slowing population growth This report discusses how developing countries can best leverage their demographic dividends in order to boost income and wealth while they are still young and growing as well as how they can prepare for the inevitable aging of their populations that looms just over the horizon It also explores what the emerging new demographic realities imply for the optimal shape of U S development policy in decades to come

Macroeconomic Effects of Climate Change in an Aging World Mr. Vimal V Thakoor,Engin Kara,2022-12-16 Climate and demographic changes are two major long term trends that are evolving simultaneously The global population is aging while climate change is increasing the frequency and severity of weather related disasters and lowering productivity This paper examines the macroeconomic effects of these three changes in a common framework Simulation results suggest that while aging drags down the real interest rate climate change puts upward pressure on the real interest rate and inflation As climate change intensifies it will be the dominant factor shaping the macroeconomic variables This results in higher inflation and a higher debt to GDP ratio requiring tighter fiscal and monetary policies The results further suggest that economic uncertainty induced by climate change amplifies these effects of climate change
