

The Ostrich is the largest living bird. The male is 72 inches long, and stands 8 feet high. The male is black and white, the female is grey. Ostriches live in Africa. They cannot fly, but are very fast runners.

The Ptarmigan is one of the game birds which lives in the Arctic Circle. Like other Arctic animals, the Ptarmigan is white in the winter and brown in the summer.

The cassowaries live in Australia and on some of the islands north of it. They are shy birds which are also bad tempered. When they attack they leap at their enemy feet first and slash them with their claws.

The rheas are sometimes called South American ostriches. They look rather like an ostrich, but they are much smaller. They are about five feet high, and are the largest American birds. They are also very shy and race away from their enemies.

In most flightless birds, the male usually incubates the eggs.

FLYCATCHERS Flycatchers are small birds related to thrushes. They live in forests and fields throughout most of the Old World. Flycatchers sit upright waiting for insects, which they swoop after (often down to the ground), before returning to their perches.

GAME BIRDS. This group of birds is spread over almost all the world. Most of the birds live on the ground and have large feet and strong legs. They run well, and they can fly well for short distances. The game birds are hunted by man for food. The large flight muscles are very good to eat. Game birds have also been kept as domestic animals by man for a long time. Turkeys and chickens are both members of this group.

The wild game birds are hunted throughout the world. Pheasants, partridges, grouse, ptarmigan and quail are members of the group. The peacock is one of the most gorgeous of these birds, but many of them have beautiful plumage.

The Australian Brush turkeys are interesting because they do not sit on their eggs, but bury them in mounds of rotting vegetation to hatch, just as the reptiles do.

The Jungle Fowl is 30 inches long. They are probably the ancestors of domestic chickens. They live in Asia.

The Golden Pheasant is one of the most colourful of the game birds. It is 36 inches long.

The Northern Gannet is 42 inches long. It is the only member of the Gannet family that really migrates.

GANNETS White sea birds, the size of geese, gannets live in dense colonies, particularly in the North Atlantic. They feed on fish, for which they plunge headlong into the sea from great heights. They have pointed beaks and tails, and black tips to their wings.

GREBES Grebes are a group of diving birds, found throughout the world, except for the polar regions. Grebes live entirely on water, and are clumsy fliers. They have flattened bodies, covered with waterproof feathers. They have lobed rather than
