This book is a substantially revised version of van Hoek's (1992) Ph.D. dissertation, Paths through conceptual structure: constraints on pronominal anaphora, which has influenced recent work by Langacker (1996, 1997). Van Hoek sets out with the ambitious aim of providing an explanatory account of restrictions on coreference, both within clauses and cross-sententially. Her analysis is formulated within the framework of Cognitive Grammar, and contains a clear introduction to the relevant aspects of the theory (chapter 2). She begins by posing the following questions (3), to which any account of anaphora must provide satisfactory answers if it is to be truly explanatory and comprehensive:

- Why do full noun phrases, pronouns and reflexives exhibit different patterns of distribution, and why are coreference possibilities the way they are?
- Why, despite its limitations, does c-command work as well as it does?
- What relation is there between syntactic coreference constraints and discourse-level coreference (if any, given that generative accounts of anaphora have typically excluded discourse-level coreference)?
- What is the role of 'point of view' and linear word order in anaphora?
- Why do grammaticality judgements vary with regard to certain constructions, and why are some grammatically acceptable constructions rare in actual usage?

Van Hoek takes as her starting point the semantic characterisation of nominals developed in Accessibility Theory by Ariel, Givón and others. In Accessibility Theory, different types of referring expressions reflect the relative accessibility of mental representations of their referents in a given context; for example, a pronoun indicates a higher degree of accessibility than a full noun phrase. Van Hoek proposes that unacceptable sentential coreference results when, say, a full noun phrase, indicating low accessibility of (the mental representation of) its referent, is embedded in a context in which the referent is in fact highly accessible (37). In this case, a pronoun would be expected, resulting in "an instance of semantic conflict between a nominal and its immediate context" (47) and hence obligatory non-coreference.

Van Hoek's initial task, therefore, is to develop a characterisation of the contexts which are relevant for pronominal anaphora; this she does (in chapters 3 and 4) in terms of a model based on conceptual REFERENCE POINTS. A reference point is a nominal which sets up the context within which other elements are interpreted, and is determined primarily on the basis of PROMINENCE and SEMANTIC CONNECTIVITY (with linear word order playing a secondary role). A nominal is likely to be a reference point relative to some other element if it is more salient than that element. This reflects the idea that less salient discourse entities tend to be recovered and located mentally in relation to more salient entities (58). Semantic connectivity and linear word order together determine which entities can be located relative to a given reference point (that is, the extent of a reference point's DOMINION). For example, the principle of linear word order (that nominals are more likely to be reference points in relation to elements which follow them than in relation to elements which precede them (81)) explains why coreference between the italicised nominals is acceptable in (1a) but not in (1b):

- (1) (a) Peter has a lot of talent and he should go far.
 (b) He* has a lot of talent and Peter should go far.

Anaphora And Conceptual Structure:

Anaphora and Conceptual Structure Karen van Hoek, 1997-09-02 Karen van Hoek presents a cogent analysis of the classic problem of constraints on pronominal anaphora within the framework of Cognitive Grammar Van Hoek proceeds from the position that grammatical structure can be characterized in terms of semantic and phonological representations without autonomous syntactic structures or principles such as tree structures or c command She argues that constraints on anaphora can be explained in terms of semantic interactions between nominals and the contexts in which they are embedded Integrating the results of previous work Van Hoek develops a model in which some nominals function as conceptual reference points that dominate over stretches defined by the semantic relations among elements When a full noun is in the domain of a reference point coreference is ruled out since the speaker would be sending contradictory messages about the salience of the noun's referent With profound implications for the nature of syntax this book will interest theoretical linguists of all persuasions

New Directions in Cognitive Linguistics Vyvyan Evans, Stephanie Pourcel, 2009 Nearly three decades since the publication of the seminal Metaphors We Live By Cognitive Linguistics is now a mature theoretical and empirical enterprise with a voluminous associated literature It is arguably the most rapidly expanding school in modern linguistics and one of the most exciting areas of research within the interdisciplinary project known as cognitive science As such Cognitive Linguistics is increasingly attracting a broad readership both within linguistics as well as from neighbouring disciplines including other cognitive and social sciences and from disciplines within the humanities This volume contains over 20 papers by leading experts in cognitive linguistics which survey the state of the art and new directions in cognitive linguistics The volume is divided into 5 sections covering all the traditional areas of study in cognitive linguistics as well as newer areas including applications and extensions Sections include Approaches to semantics Approaches to metaphor and blending Approaches to grammar Language embodiment and cognition Extensions and applications of cognitive linguistics

Representation of Cognitive Structures Michel Achard, 1998 Within the framework of cognitive grammar investigates the distribution of infinitival and finite complements indicative and subjunctive in the French language emphasizing the causation perception modal conceptualizing subject and impersonal constructions Presents a fairly large array of constructions that have received considerable attention in the literature but rather than attempting comprehensiveness seeks only to demonstrate that French complementation can be considered in a global fashion Achard believes the findings can be applied to other languages as well Annotation copyrighted by Book News Inc Portland OR

The Syntax-Discourse Interface Petra B. Schumacher, 2005-09-22 This book combines theoretical and experimental aspects of the establishment of dependency It provides an account of dependency relations by focusing on the representation and interpretation of referentially dependent elements particularly regular reflexives logophors and pronouns First the establishment of dependency is discussed within a model of syntax discourse correspondences that predicts an economy based dependency hierarchy contingent on the level of representation at which the dependency is formed as well as the internal structure of the dependent element and its antecedent Secondly the model's predictions are substantiated by a series of experimental studies conducted in English and Dutch providing evidence from three sources of online sentence comprehension reaction time studies Broca's aphasia patient studies and event related brain potential studies The findings show that dependencies are established at distinct levels of linguistic encoding i.e. syntax or discourse determined by the presence or absence of coargumenthood and the representation of the dependency forming elements

Speech and Thought Representation in English Lieven

Vandelanotte, 2009-07-14 This book aims to provide a new linguistically grounded typology of speech and thought representation in English on the basis of the systematic study of deictic syntactic and semantic properties of authentic examples drawn from literary as well as non literary sources In the area beyond direct and indirect speech or thought free indirect discourse has often been implicitly treated as a residual category that can accommodate anything that is neither one nor the other This book takes a fresh look at the evidence in the area of deixis particularly through a close study of pronoun and proper name use and proposes to distinguish the more character oriented free indirect type from a narrator oriented distancing indirect type which is grammatically wholly structured from the narrator's deictic standpoint Unlike free indirect representations which coherently represent the character's viewpoint the distancing indirect type sees narrators appropriating character discourse for their own purposes which may for instance be ironic The distinctions thus drawn shed new light on the much debated dual voice approach to free indirect discourse Included in the scope of this book are subjectified uses of clauses such as I think which no longer primarily construe a cognition process but rather come to function as hedges Such speaker encoding uses are argued to involve an interpersonal type of structure not based on complementation whereas the non subjectified cases receive an interclausal complementation analysis which does not have recourse to the problematic notion of reporting verb This monograph is mainly of interest to researchers and graduate students interested in the syntax semantics and pragmatics of reported speech viewed from a constructional perspective
