

Ancient Egyptian Society

Assistants known as viziers helped the pharaohs to govern. They were the chief administrators of ancient Egypt. They oversaw the treasury and the court system, among other duties.

Scribes formed a special class of literate professionals. They performed important bureaucratic duties such as record keeping, tax accounting, and the management of public works.

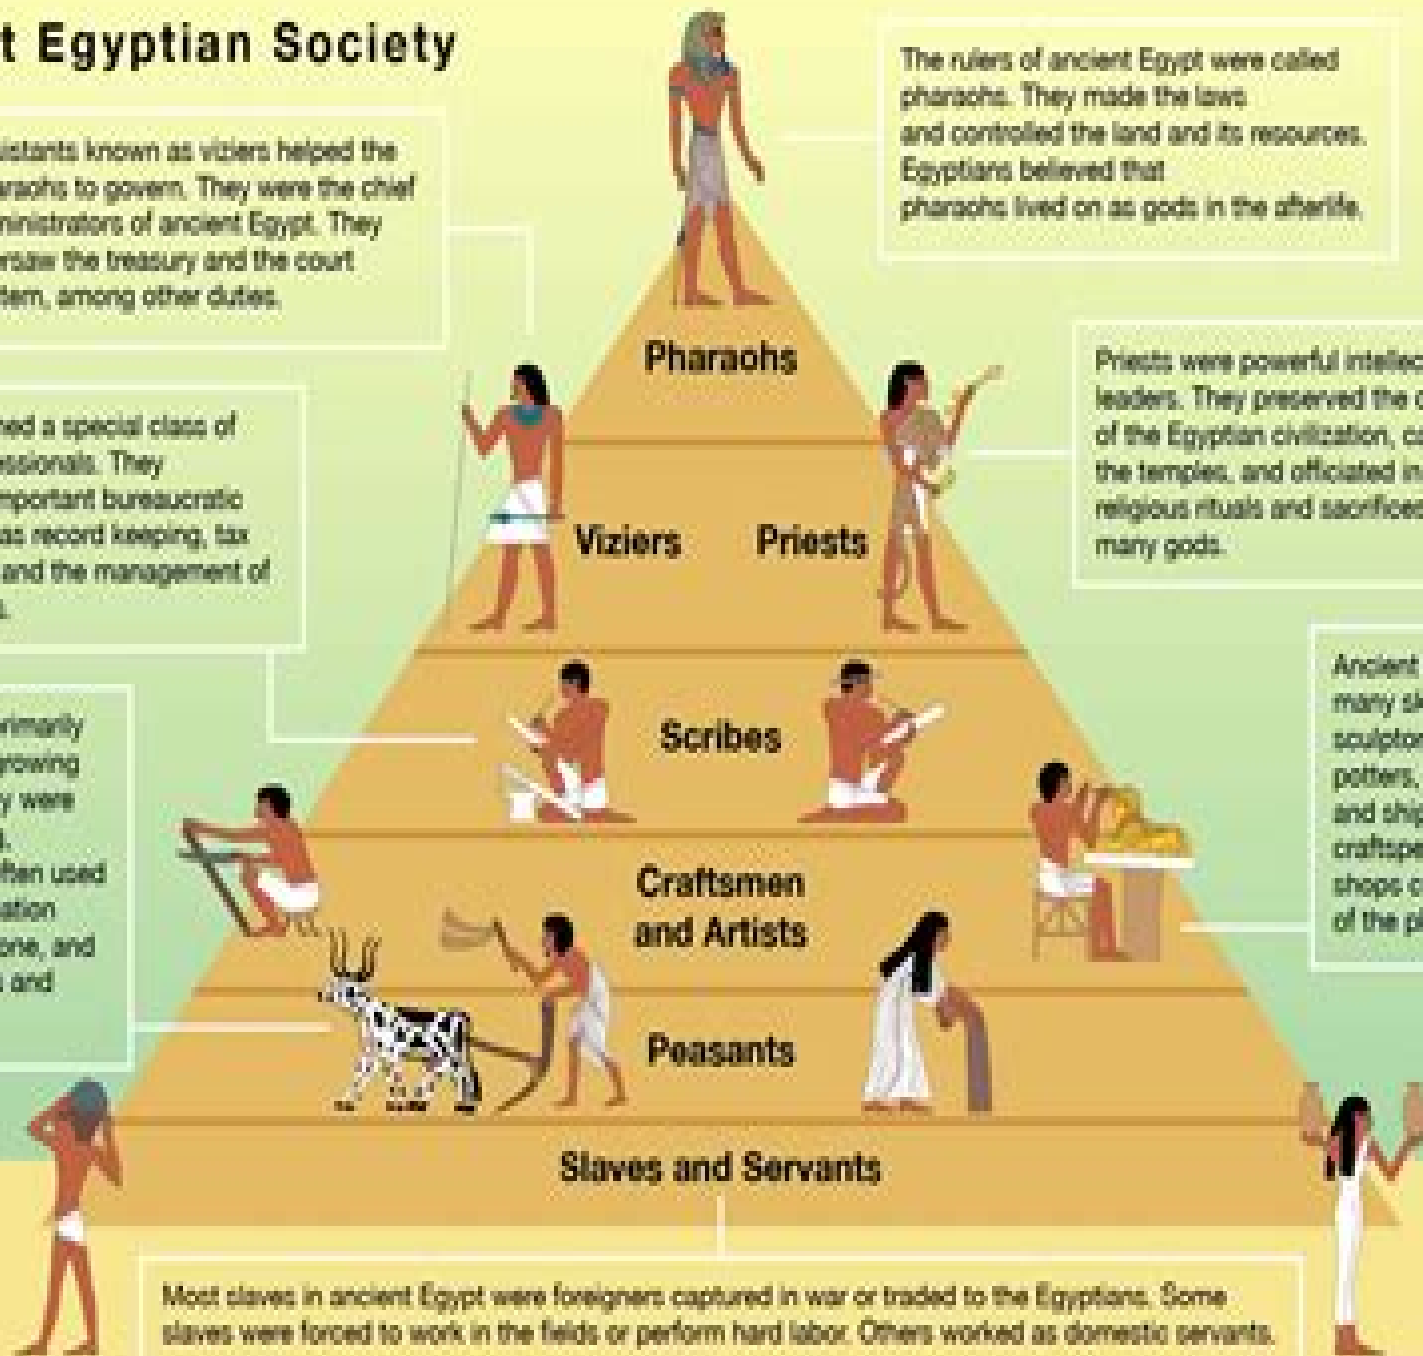

Peasants were primarily responsible for growing crops. When they were not busy farming, peasants were often used to construct irrigation works, quarry stone, and help build tombs and temples.

The rulers of ancient Egypt were called pharaohs. They made the laws and controlled the land and its resources. Egyptians believed that pharaohs lived on as gods in the afterlife.

Priests were powerful intellectual leaders. They preserved the culture of the Egyptian civilization, cared for the temples, and officiated in the religious rituals and sacrifices to the many gods.

Ancient Egypt produced many skilled painters, sculptors, metalworkers, potters, woodworkers, and shipbuilders. Many craftspeople worked in shops close to the palace of the pharaoh.

Most slaves in ancient Egypt were foreigners captured in war or traded to the Egyptians. Some slaves were forced to work in the fields or perform hard labor. Others worked as domestic servants.
