

ETHICS MODULE 5: ETHICS THROUGH THICK AND THIN, ETHICS AND RELIGION

LESSON 1: GLOBALIZATION AND PLURALISM

1. What is globalization?

Globalization in its simplest form constructs the derivation of the word “integration”. Technicalities come in from the long history of chasing power and settling the fire not to burn others but to light them so that no one will be left behind the darkness. Reflecting on the reality, America winning the battle of the Cold War against the Soviet Union (communism) applies its idealisms such as capitalism. Being able to rise with the entitlement of becoming a superpower country, logically, to build an extension of their power to the other countries is what makes them superior. Narrowing the sphere of discussion, globalization goes through the borders of every country and nation. Uplifting the core value of integration for the development and progression of everyone through the exchange of products mainly related to technologies, communications, and investments. This is to allow countries to become more flexible and considerate. The idea of globalization would simply get into our minds as a good idealism. To create connections and help poor countries will simply steal our hearts to embrace this concept. But, on the other side due to the countries becoming more open the preservation of culture gets disturbed, issues including child labor, and multinational corporations overpowering the nation's interest go in the line of complexity, alteration, and talks about human rights. In summary, as for me, globalization is a powerful binding force that creates integration, only the application as it is dealing with the different contexts should be observed and rightfully be applied in the fulfillment of what should it be.

2. What is the role of ethics in settling international issues such as territorial disputes, human rights violations, and war?

In the whole duration of studying the subject of Ethics, I conclude that this concept stands between the walls of culture, law, and an extension of justice and fairness. Well, looking at the paradigm of the subject, it starts from the morality of each individual. From individuals, it penetrates differences as it would imply in the whole parameter of what defines and underpins globalization. Having that capacity to penetrate borders of differences, Ethics for what it values the concept of humanity as it aims to flatten the curves of derogatory practices of humans. Remember the concept of cultural relativism and its principle to do considerations that when we talk about the welfare of the people, the utilitarian approach of inserting what is commonly accepted values even if against one's culture should rightfully and must stand between. The mandatory female mutilation albeit part of a long history and practice should be considered a violation of human rights as it could become a threat to the lives of many young girls. Ethics talks about the sincerity of our morals to conduct humane practices and decisions. The world is full of complexity but humans have one thing that they should keep in mind, and that is to remember that they are all human.

3. Give and discuss at least three principles of international law?
