1. Introduction

Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, low-impact, and low-volume exercise program on the physical fitness of sedentary, middle-aged women. The program was designed to be a safe and effective means of increasing physical activity in sedentary women. The program consisted of three sessions per week, each lasting 30 minutes. The sessions included a warm-up, a main exercise period, and a cool-down. The main exercise period consisted of a combination of low-impact aerobics, strength training, and flexibility exercises. The program was evaluated using a variety of physical fitness tests, including a 1-mile walk, a 1-mile run, a 1-mile swim, and a 1-mile bike ride. The results of the study showed that the program had a positive effect on physical fitness, with significant improvements in endurance, strength, and flexibility. The program was well-tolerated by the participants, and the results suggest that it may be a useful tool for promoting physical activity in sedentary women.

University Researcher: "The study found that the majority of the participants (75%) were aged between 18 and 30, with a mean age of 24.5 years. The sample was predominantly female (80%) and consisted of students from various disciplines, including psychology, sociology, and education. The study was conducted in a controlled laboratory setting over a period of six weeks." (Note: This is a placeholder text for the actual content of the image.)
