

Preface

*Bill Green

It is customary – generic, even – to conclude projects such as this with some kind of Preface, to announce – after the (f)act, as it were – what it is one thinks one's written, and why and how it should be read accordingly. There is no innocence in this, either, especially now, now that the whole business of 'prefacing' has been exposed in all its anxiety and its luxury, by one moreover who also always writes of Writing, as I suspect I do myself (in a minor key, of course...). Take for instance the following, which I consider worth citing here at length:

The preface would announce in the future tense ('this is what you are going to read') the conceptual content or significance [...] of what will already have been written. And thus sufficiently read to be gathered up in its semantic tenor and proposed in advance. From the view point of the fore-word, which recreates an intention-to-say after the fact, the text exists as something written – a past – which, under the false appearance of a present, a hidden omnipotent author (in full mastery of his product) is presenting to the reader as his future. Here is what I wrote, then read, and what I am writing that you are going to read. After which you will again be able to take possession of this preface which in sum you have not yet begun to read, even though, once having read it, you will already have anticipated everything that follows and thus you might just as well dispense with reading the rest. The pre of the preface makes the future present, represents it, draws it closer, breathes it in, and in going ahead of it puts it ahead. The pre reduces the future to the form of manifest presence (Derrida, 1981b: 7).

Given, all this, there is a certain frisson, a brief, strangely unsettling shock of recognition for me in (re)turning to what served as the preface to an earlier dissertation, written what seems now so long ago and yet isn't, in the general scheme of things:

Given the nature of the thesis – writing which takes as its own subject the nature of writing – there are, as might be expected, certain immediate problems that I have encountered in its preparation. One of these is most certainly my own growing awareness of what may be called the problem of writing in itself, and with this, the very real irony of actually writing about writing of the kind examined in the thesis (Green, 1979).

I went on to propose, in all humility, that an undertaking of this kind, "given the radical assertion of [the] texts themselves", required "an appropriately radical engagement on the part of the reader, the realisation of which may well be a long and arduous process". I followed this by attempting to anticipate and forestall what might well be the observations, or even the objections, of my examiners by referring to the research/writing process "in all its
