are the result of breaking away. A horse that is tied with a halter made like No. 1 will rarely continue to pull. It is like the ordinary halter, excepting that the chin strap is double, and the ring is placed on but half of it. The instant the horse attempts to pull he finds his nose suddenly compressed and his breath shut off.

The unpleasant sensation ceases at once when he stands up to the post and behaves himself. This is an effective halter to place on halter-pullers. No. 2 is made of a single piece of rope, can be constructed in five minutes at a cost of five cents, and is extremely handy where one suddenly desires a number of halters for sending away horses that have been sold. It is not a safe night halter, as it is liable to be rubbed off. By attaching a throat strap to it, however, it may be made to serve satisfactorily for some months.
