Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine if there were differences in the prevalence of musculoskeletal disorders among different types of workers. The study included 600 employees from three companies. Data were collected by means of a questionnaire that asked about symptoms of musculoskeletal disorders, work conditions, and demographic characteristics. Results showed that the prevalence of musculoskeletal disorders was higher among non-manual workers than manual workers. This finding suggests that non-manual workers are more at risk of developing musculoskeletal disorders than manual workers.
