

Assignment 2 - "Approaching Religion" (pp 1-22)

Name: ____

Date: 01-22-2024_____

Q1. What is the insider-outsider challenge?

____It compares the extent to which one can personally know the experience of another individual versus objectively viewing the acts of another. No one can completely belong to either group due to all the individual experiences, personalities and biases we possess.

Q2. Distinguish between the religionist and the reductionist approaches to the study of religions:

____Religionists regard religion as sui generis—anything that is present can be deemed sacred, whether its an ant, rock, or the moon. Sui generis illustrates a distinct perspective on life. On the contrary, the reductionist perspective rejects the religionist claim of sui generis; they view symbols and myths as socio-rhetorical tools that originate from human need. They warn that religious data should not be taken as true or seriously.

Q3. Name the three ways religions function in society. How do religions change their role in society over time?

____Religions of the status quo help to stabilize society by providing guidelines to follow a way of life; it also gives people a sense of identity and teaches how to cope with different challenges in life. Sometimes, this can lead religious authorities to manipulate scriptures and religious rules to fit their own political or business agendas. Religions of resistance, on the other hand, purposefully contradict the status quo and encourage socially deviant behavior to set them apart. This can lead to revolutions. Religions of revolutions, therefore, also challenge religions of the status quo, but through militant or rebellious action.

Q4. Name three cultural roots of the modern study of religions. What did some of the European Enlightenment thinkers contribute to the Western way of studying religions?
