

5 SURPRISINGLY EASY WAYS TO IMPROVE YOUR LIFE

TO EXPERIENCE LESS REGRET:

Don't try to optimize everything

Research has shown that constantly trying to find the best options can actually make us less happy and less satisfied with the options we choose. Instead, make decisions like a Nobel economist: choose the first option that meets your criteria of "good enough." This will tend to make you more satisfied with your choices and less likely to experience regret.

TO COME UP WITH MORE CREATIVE SOLUTIONS:

Think "could" instead of "should"

Researchers at Harvard Business School found that when we think about what we "should do," we think too narrowly and limit ourselves to making trade-offs between the obvious choices. Thinking about problems in terms of what we "could do" opens up our thinking and helps us come up with new solutions.

TO BE MORE CONTENT:

Focus on what you're gaining rather than what you're missing out on

To avoid FOMO (Fear of Missing Out), focus on what you're gaining by not saying "yes" to everything. Research has shown that trying to do everything makes us less likely to do the things we really want. So, focus on what you gain by missing out on some of the little things: you'll be more likely to pay attention to the really important things.

TO BE MORE GRATEFUL:

Don't just count your blessings; be surprised by them

We have an amazing ability to adapt to our situation. While adaptation can make us feel better about negative events over time, it can also make us feel less happy about positive events over time. Researchers have found that when we think about ways in which a positive event might NOT have happened, the event seems more surprising to us and we feel more fortunate that it occurred.

TO BE HAPPIER IN THE FUTURE:

Capture your ordinary moments now

Researchers at Harvard found that our ordinary moments might be more valuable to us than we realize. As the researchers explain, we generally know that we will want to remember extraordinary events, but we don't often realize how much we will want to remember our ordinary events in the future. So, capture your ordinary moments. You'll thank me later.
