Like a thrill-seeking moth diving into a candle flame, Comet ISON is plunging toward a close encounter with the sun — close enough to be singed, vaporized or broken to bits.

But ISON also could swing around the sun and emerge intact on the other side, venting a little gas and dust, perhaps, but remaining otherwise unscathed.

"It's doing this death-defying plunge by the sun," said astronomer Amy Mainzer of NASA's Jet Propulsion Laboratory in Pasadena. "The question is: What is going to happen when it makes that near miss? Anything could happen with this particular comet; we just don't know. Comets are funny things. They are notoriously difficult to predict. That's part of what makes them fun to look at."

Because of a computer glitch, some customers will have until Feb. 28 to find new coverage.

A second health insurer, Anthem Blue Cross, is giving some of its customers in Brooklyn an unusual policy concession.

Because of a computer glitch, 50,000 Anthem Blue Cross policyholders will not be held on to their plans until Feb. 28, rather than face in Dec. 31 cutoff to find new coverage.

Earlier, Blue Shield of California said it would pay for the health care of its 100,000 members by March 31.

That individuals who wind up buying insurance through the Covered California exchange could find a short list of hospitals and doctors.

That's the compromise insurers cover up with to fulfill the coverage requirements and cost-cutting pressures of Obamacare.

Walk through Mary McCarrell's home and you'd never know that what's most important is missing.

Her 1960s-era, Tangier-style, seashore home is full of color and life with McCarrell's paintings, flower vases and the kitchen table waiting for guests. Her amplifier and guitar in the living room are ready for use.

It's not until McCarrell starts discussing isolation that you start to understand the struggles of someone who lives with mental illness every day, who endures without children and grandchildren because of family restraining orders against her.

Struggling with bipolar disorder in 1985, McCarrell managed to stay close to family until five years ago, when strained relationships finally splintered apart in what McCarrell calls a series of manic episodes.
