Applied Organometallic Chemistry And Catalysis:

Applied Organometallic Chemistry And Catalysis Whyman, Robin Whyman, 2003 The phenomenal growth and interest in organometallic chemistry since the discovery of ferrocene in the early 1950s exhibits close parallels with applications in homogeneously catalysed chemical processes for the manufacture of both commodity and fine chemicals This primer provides a perspective on these developments over the past half century with particular emphasis on first the influence of organometallic chemistry on our understanding of both homogeneous and heterogeneous catalysis and second the principal commercial applications of homogeneous catalysis that have been developed during this period
