Blood Program in World War II., 1964 Medical officers who like myself served overseas in World War II and who observed the management of casualties with and without the use of whole blood are peculiarly qualified to appreciate the achievements of the whole blood program Its results unfolded before our eyes In forward hospitals we saw men saved from death and sometimes almost brought back from the dead In fixed hospitals we received wounded men who once would have died in forward hospitals or even on the battlefield We received casualties with the most serious wounds in good condition With the aid of more blood we performed radical surgery upon them and we watched them withstand operation and with still more blood recover promptly from it There are more than the usual reasons for the preparation and publication of this volume on the whole blood program A major reason of course is the impact this therapeutic advance has had upon medical care civilian as well as military Another reason is to keep faith with the multiple personnel who planned and operated the whole blood program and with the millions of American citizens whose gifts of their own blood saved the lives of so many American soldiers who otherwise would have died The Medical Department of the United States Army in World War II. United States.
