

The next time you watch Blue Peter, try this experiment: cover your ears until all the sound is muffled, then imagine what it would be like to hear strange, high-pitched, sizzling noises—or low, booming thuds—while you were looking at us doing the programme.

You'll think you were in the middle of some kind of dreadful nightmare, but that's what life is like for the smaller half of the one in every four hundred children in Britain, who are either completely deaf or very hard of hearing.

The first we found out about the problem, deaf children wrote to us, and we wanted to help. As always.

"What if you become deaf when you're grown up, you keep all your knowledge of words and facts in your head. If you can't hear them any more, but you're educated, how do you most start to learn things in the first place?"

One way, we discovered, is by being able to use very special equipment that lights up to tell deaf people whether or not they're making the right notes when they're learning to speak.

It's used in most of Britain's eighty schools for deaf children. But the problem is, that the schools not only help a fraction of the children in need, they can't take in all the ordinary schools where it can be difficult for them to understand what's going on, or worse of all, to be school at all.

We found out that the most badly off were children in remote country areas, in the Highlands of Scotland, for example, the nearest schools for the deaf are hundreds of miles away in Aberdeen and Glasgow.

Building new schools takes time and a vast amount of money, but there could be a solution, a travelling school on wheels. A van fitted with all the special equipment that the teacher can actually drive to the children.

John took Blue Peter film cameras to Jersey where a mobile classroom was already in action. Two days with Eric Payne, the driver and teacher, left him in no doubt about its usefulness.

"You wait till you see the film," he said. "There's this little lad called Adam, who is able to keep up with quite difficult arithmetic, thanks to the extra help he's getting. He's seven years old. And Derek who is thirteen, she's actually able to learn French. She speaks it much better than me—and my hearing's normal!"

Twelve in Jersey to see a mobile classroom in action. 7-year-old Adam was talking up with his arithmetic.

"It's like a key," said Lesley, after she'd seen the film. "That van's unlocking the door to a whole new life for Adam and...

That's it!" said Peter. "Key... Key-Note. Unlock the door and you hear sounds... notes."

"And we could collect keys, too," said Lesley.

We reached our Appeal Target by 1 January. It was a marvellous moment when we drove our first Key-Note van into the studio.

we collected enough, we could buy more of those vans.

"Let's collect cars as well as keys," said John. "I bet there are people who've still got an old dinky of two in their backyards. And we did very well with old toy cars when we collected them eight years ago. They turned out to be so valuable, we had our very first Blue Peter Auction."

That's how our Key Note Appeal began. Our target was 2 million postcards and envelopes of old toys and cars. We worked out that they'd provide that Key Note vans, and the places where they were needed most badly were Norfolk, Cornwall, the Dyfed area of Wales and the Highlands of Scotland. Altogether, those places had about one thousand five hundred children who'd be able to use those mobile classrooms—if only they had the chance.

Thanks to you, they have!

By 1 January 1978 we'd not only hit the target—we'd exceeded it. Old keys and cars had come pouring in to our Depot at Lambeth by post, by personal delivery and by Roadstone, whose generous offer of free, nationwide delivery meant people could send large and heavy donations without any extra cost. All the collectors' items were set aside to be auctioned. The rest was melted down and sold as scrap metal.

It was a proud moment when we drove our first Key Note van into the Blue Peter studio. Not only the vans. Your keys and cars had provided all the special equipment, too.

Expert Miss Martin showed us how the equipment worked and we asked her what we could do with all your extra keys and cars.

Collectors' items like this 1930 Austin 800 were melted down. The metal car was recycled to send postcards for our Auction.

"I think video equipment for deaf children in schools is the greatest need, after the vans," said John.

A few weeks later he demonstrated how the video was worked. They included cameras, so that teachers could record lessons to suit individual needs. And with the "freeze frame" device, the tapes could be stopped at any moment when the deaf children couldn't understand what was happening.

These kits could help hundreds of children all over Britain and we hope we'll be able to provide a great many of them.

One of our most unusual donations has been a
