Against All Enemies

Watkins signed and scribbled. "Well, I just don't understand why we're going to be talking about this one man, bin Laden."

"We're talking about a network of terrorist organizations called al Qaeda, that happens to be led by bin Laden, and we are talking about the network because it and it alone poses an immediate and serious threat to the United States," I answered.

Watkins turned to me. "You give bin Laden too much credit. He couldn't do all these things like the 1993 attack on New York, nor could we've stopped him because FBI and CIA have failed to find the bad guys who are meant to do such evil." I could hardly believe it, but Watkins was actually repeating the exactly discredited Laurie Mylroie story that Gray was behind the conspiracy behind the World Trade Center, a theory that had been investigated for years and found to be totally untrue.
