

- Since 1960s African politicians as well as political analysts started to reject the European views that African political ideas were borrowed from outside the continent.
- Scholars such as Sithole expressed their views arguing that African political ideas are expressed in music, art, sculpture, etc.
- This also illustrates that Africans are independent human beings who can master their own motivation and destiny.
- George Shepperson argues that African political thought is as old as human society in Africa. To believe otherwise is to presume that preliterate peoples cannot think politically-yet man is a political animal.
