

Tatton Park's library contains over 8,000 books! That's a lot of books to organise, clean and store.

The books were collected by the Egerton family over three centuries and include subjects such as Music, Travel, Art - and even how to bring up children!

Here are a few fun activities for you to try in the classrooms or at home.

The Library in Tatton Park's Mansion

How would you design and organise your own library?

Activity 1: Create a Bookplate

A bookplate is a decorative label that is glued into a book, to tell you who owns the book. On the left is an example of a bookplate at Tatton Park. It has beautiful designs, including a lion, which is the symbol of the Egerton family who used to live there. The blank space in the middle is where the owner of the book would write their name, plus any other information, such as their address, or maybe the date the day the book was purchased or added to the library.

Create your own bookplate from a piece of card or thick paper measuring approximately 8 x 6 cm. Try some different designs and think about what symbols or pictures would tell people something about you. Your bookplate could say "This book belongs to..." and your name. Be inventive with colours and designs. When you have finished, you could glue this in the front of one of your books, but remember to ask adult permission first!

TIP: You could also make some for your friends and family. You may like to write "Ex Libris..." on your bookplates. This is Latin for "From the library of..."
