Abstract: Agricultural land protection is vital for the realization of national food security and an ecological civilization. From the perspective of agricultural ecological value and landscape value, perfecting the theory of agricultural land rent is beneficial to the construction of an ecological civilization. Based on Marx's land rent theory of agricultural production, the analytical framework of the agricultural decision support systems (DSS) was constructed; then, the agricultural land rent in suburbs was theoretically accounted for via a numerical example, and its realization rules were simulated according to the conditions of China (i.e., the specific solutions in force). Some interesting conclusions were found: (1) Agricultural production in suburbs involves both natural reproduction and social reproduction. (2) Agricultural land rent should include production land rent, ecological land rent, and landscape land rent. (3) The promotion of an ecological civilization and the development of the economy and society will lead to an increase in the comprehensive coefficient of agricultural land rent. (4) With the development of the economy, ecological land rent and landscape land rent should be gradually charged from zero payment to full payment. Based on these conclusions, five corresponding policy implications are proposed to improve the land profit of agricultural land owners to promote agricultural production, food security, and an ecological civilization.

1. Introduction

In order to meet the challenges resulting from the rapid increase in the world's population and food demand across the world, sustainable agricultural development is essential, in particular to increase food production [1]. Agricultural decision support systems (DSS) play an vital role in continuing to remain viable and increase productivity [2]. With advances in computing techniques, the use of artificial intelligence, etc., DSS have been widely used in agricultural decision making [3], especially by many agricultural enterprises [1]. One study concluded that DSSs should be aimed towards aggregating data to enhance the decision-making power available to farmers [4]. This paper argues that increasing agricultural land owners' engagement in agricultural production is crucial in order to promote sustainable agriculture development and that established DSS analytical frameworks take less account of the issue of agricultural land owners' incentives to engage in agricultural production. The protection of agricultural land is a basic guarantee to realize national food
