

for the Royal Navy and the East India Company, partly to overcome the increasing shortage of oak (see resumé) and partly to avoid the mounting costs and corruption in the home dockyards.

Blackwall: Thames-side district of S.E. London, well-known for its docks and warehouses and formerly a considerable shipbuilding centre.

Blackwall frigate: famous type of ship built at Blackwall in the 19th century. Many were engaged in the East Indies trade. In design they were much like the Royal Navy frigates of the day, with the old square stern, though they later developed finer lines. Probably the earliest Blackwall frigate was the Sringapatnam of 818 tons, built in 1837. The largest was about 1400 tons. Not all so-called Blackwall frigates were built at Blackwall; later vessels were commissioned by various Blackwall firms to be constructed in other yards, e.g. at Sunderland.

Blackwall ships were among the best and speediest of their day, strongly manned and attracting an excellent type of seaman. Many were ex-Royal Navy men. An eye-witness in the 1860s described how there could be seen at Calcutta, when the Blackwallers were at the height of their prosperity, stretched along from bow to next ship's stern, from twenty to thirty of the handsomest ships in the world, flying the famous house-flags of Green, Money Wigram, Joseph Somes, Marshall, Smith, Willis and Dunbar. Men of war style and discipline were always maintained . . . Each ship was provided with a fiddler, who played at least four hours daily.

Cecily Fox-Smith, A Book of Famous Ships (1924)

As a good example of a Blackwaller, the Narcantle's career may be outlined. Built by Messrs Green, she was 198 ft 8 in. long and 36 ft 6 in. in breadth, with a registered tonnage of 1137. Her maiden voyage began

The Sringapatnam home to, from an oil painting by J. Lynn, 1837.
