Libician, 2002-10 The Conservation Reserve Program is the Fed gov t s largest single conservation program and compensates landowners for taking highly erodible cropland or environmentally sensitive land out of ag production State tech committees STC advise USDA s Natural Resources Conservation Serv NRCS state conservationists on the implementation of NRCS administered conservation programs in each state This report obtained the views of members of STC on the effectiveness of USDA s conservation efforts in addressing environmental objectives EO related to ag and any program elements that hinder the achieve of EO related to ag as well as program characteristics that programs might include to better meet these objectives Agricultural Conservation United States Government Accountability Office, 2018-02-03 Agricultural Conservation Survey of USDA State Technical Committee Members Agricultural Conservation United States. General Accounting Office, 2002 AGRICULTURAL CONSERVATION: Survey of USDA State Technical Committee Members, 2002 Farmers ranchers and private forest landowners own and manage more than two thirds of the continental United States 1 9 billion acres and thus are the primary stewards of our soil water and wildlife habitat Because of this important responsibility how private land is used is increasingly being recognized as vital to the protection of the nation s environment and natural resources For example state water quality agencies report that agricultural production is a leading contributor to impaired water quality similarly habitat loss associated with agriculture has been a factor in the declining populations of many wildlife species including many threatened or endangered native species In recognition of the critical role played by private landowners the Congress directed the U S Department of Agriculture USDA to implement the numerous programs aimed at improving the stewardship practices on these lands USDA currently has over 70 million acres of privately owned land enrolled in programs that offer landowners financial incentives to implement conservation practices to protect or improve soil and water quality and wildlife habitat USDA s conservation efforts are intended to address specific environmental concerns target funding toward state and local environmental priority areas and include partnerships with state or local entities to leverage limited funding USDA s Conservation Reserve Program CRP the federal government s largest single conservation program has an enrollment of almost 34 million acres and makes annual payments of about 1 5 billion on these acres Agricultural Conservation, 2002 Environmental Effects of U.S. Department of Agriculture Conservation Programs, 2004 Month in Review ..., 2002-03 Hearing to Review the Chesapeake Bay TMDL, Agricultural Conservation Practices, and Their Implications on National Watersheds United States. Congress. House. Committee on Agriculture. Subcommittee on Conservation, Energy, and Forestry, 2011 Federal Register, 2004-05-21 Agricultural Conservation Issues in the 111th Congress Megan Stubbs, 2010-11 Agricultural conservation has been a public policy issue for more than 60 years Congress has repeatedly taken action on the issue through water and soil legislation often as part of omnibus farm bills The USDA's conservation efforts have centered on implementing these conservation programs through working land conservation practices retiring land from production or establishing conservation easements and providing technical assistance. The climate change debate and use of ecosystem services markets has brought conservation to the forefront of discussion on the role of agriculture in reducing greenhouse gas emissions. Also, the effect of ethanol production on natural resources and changes in land use is an ongoing concern in the area of biofuels policy.
