LIGHTNING IN A BOTTLE

We must have heard the expression a thousand times by now: "You guys caught lightning in a bottle with that one." It has emerged from the mouths of studio executives, producers, agents, even aunts and uncles — always that same damned phrase about "lightning in a bottle" and often with the implied hope that we might somehow pull that trick off again. In retrospect, it seems a pretty accurate summary of what happened when you consider not only the success of the movie itself, but all the incredible stuff that followed: the fashion fad, the newspaper editorials, the hit songs, the cover stories, the ratings, the posters, the amateur robberies "in the style of", and the pleasant, slightly spooky feeling of having coined three household words (if you include the "and"). But there were quite a few years before all that came to pass when we never stopped to think about the lightning at all. We were just trying to sell the bottle.

In 1964 we had both been working for a few years at Columbia Pictures.
