M.E. Myself and I - Diary of a Psychic Nicky Alan Nicky Alan, 2020-11-27 A brutally honest journey showing strength of the human spirit faith in the unseen and a tenacious will to survive

Me, myself and I Cristiana Pivari, 2016-04-18 This collection of short stories won the Elsa Morante prize in 2005 In 2007 it was published again with two reprints In 2009 the contract with the publishing house expired so I decided to publish it again for personal reasons it was my first publication and I wanted to offer it again for those who did not have the opportunity to read it previously The use of the first person singular unites these ten stories which are all very human stories that will make you cry laugh or simply reflect on life The first person is used in the broadest sense of the word to emphasize that every person is unique and incredible Pivari's stories are well written and easy to read The author knows how to get into someone else's shoes both as a male and a female sharing believable stories which have a universal moral Each story easily involves you and can be understood by everyone Franco Vivona reason for prize I wanted to re publish this book with a slightly different style and the only change I made was in the title of the song from the radio in the first story Please don't ask me why I did this
