

IN BRIEF

ADVANCING INCLUSIVE GOVERNANCE IN ASIA AND THE PACIFIC REGION (2022-2027)

I. Background

Gender equality and women's full, equal and meaningful participation and leadership form the foundation for peaceful and resilient societies. Gender equality is a precondition for achieving the Sustainable Development Goals and any kind of meaningful and sustained progress.¹

For decades, women have struggled to participate and lead in governance and all levels of decision-making processes. Globally, women take up around 26.5 per cent of seats in parliaments. The Asia Pacific region has some of the lowest rates of women's representation in parliaments in the world, with 21.2 per cent in Asia and as low as 6.0 per cent in the Pacific Islands.² Women's representation remains similarly low in ministerial positions and chairs of permanent committees—particularly in areas such as finance and defence.³ In other branches of government, this bleak picture remains unchanged. While women human rights defenders and civil society are on the frontlines, advocating for social justice, women remain underrepresented in the justice sector, including in law enforcement, the legal profession and the judiciary.

Gender inequality in the region translates into weaknesses in existing governance systems, and may also contribute to a deepening trust crisis between people and the institutions that serve them, with many feeling left behind and no longer confident that the system is working for them. Women's rights are further impacted by rising authoritarianism and conservatism in all regions of the world. A significant rethinking of women's leadership across all aspects of governance is key to advancing both gender equality and building more just, peaceful and resilient societies.
