

The Fugitive 1902-1905

A PERSONAL REMINISCENCE OF THE FUGITIVE GROUP

BY ALLEN TATE

The Fugitive Reminiscence about which Mr. Tate writes in the following pleasant correspondence began at Fawcettville in the autumn of 1902. The founders of the Fugitive group were Walter Clyde Curry, Donald Davidson, James M. Frank, Sidney Adams, Elmer, Stanley Johnson, Harold Moore, John Crowe Ransom, Miss B. Ransom, and Allen Tate. Members in attendance were Mr. F. Miller and William Johnson. First and Walter Wells were added later in 1902. Robert Price Warren early in 1903, and Lewis Riding in March, 1903. In April, 1903, the magazine began as a quarterly; in the following year there were five numbers, six in 1904, and four in 1905. Although contributions were mostly from group members, contributors appeared upon subscription. Numbered through the attendance numbers our book went by Abel Chase, Richard Cross, William Byrnes, David Martin, Oliver Sargent, Louis Ostermeyer, John Donald Fletcher, Donald Fernal, George Dallas, and E. M. C. Strong. When in December, 1903, the fugitives abandoned their busy quest—for unlike many of its rivals, the magazine did not provide of transition—the non-regional and non-political phase of the movement was laid away. But the historical significance has been enhanced by those of the group who have since attained national eminence. One of them is Mr. Tate, whose entry in the Princeton Library does not stop with his former membership in the American Authors' Committee; he suggests that our Princeton Collection will be considerably enlarged as some future date by the publications of those young writers who have been working in the Creative Arts Program under the happy eyes of Mr. Tate, and his associates, Mr. Philip

SOME time in November 1905 I was talking to Donald Davidson, then a young English literature, on the Upper campus of old College Hall at Fawcettville. After some casual talk, Don told me that he used a few other men, including John Crowe Ransom, and
