

10 Most Common Excel Errors and How to Solve Them

Error	Why it happens	One solution
error	This is usually a sign that Excel is trying to display a number, but the column is too narrow to show it fully.	Make the column wider.
#DIV/0! error	This can only mean you're attempting to divide a number by zero.	Remove the formula or use the IFERROR function to return an alternative text if this error is found.
#N/A error	It often occurs when using a lookup function and the value you searched is not available.	Check the lookup value for typos.
#CALC! error	It may refer to any of several calculation problems related to array formulas.	Include an IF_EMPTY argument in your FILTER function.
#NAME? error	It means that Excel doesn't recognize the name of the built-in formula you're trying to use.	Correct the spelling of the function name or remove the equal sign if you aren't trying to insert a function.
#NULL! error	It means that you have asked for the result of two or more overlapping ranges.	Verify proper spacing in the formula. Use commas to separate ranges and colons to indicate range boundaries.
#NUM! error	It is usually displayed when the number is too large or small or when a calculation is impossible.	Change the formula so that the value is within the range of valid Excel numbers.
#REF! error	It's displayed when the reference to a cell is invalid.	Using absolute cell references or named ranges will ensure that the original references are not shifted.
#VALUE! error	The most likely reason is that Excel found an unexpected character in a formula expecting a number.	Double-check the syntax rules for the function you are attempting to use.
#SPILL! error	It's returned when one or more cells in the output area already contain a value, preventing an output.	Remove any obstructing values in the spill output range.
