

Energy, less than 15 coal mines were operating in 1993. However, only the Baga Nuur Mine, the Shariyn Gol Mine, and the Shivee Ovvo Mine produced substantial amounts of coal. In 1993, the Baga Nuur Mine, the country's largest coal mine, produced 3.2 Mmt, the Shariyn Gol Mine produced 1.4 Mmt, and the Shivee Ovvo produced 643,000 tons. The Nalaikh Mine, an underground mine, about 35 km southeast of Ulaanbaatar, reportedly was shut down in early 1993.

About 25% of the $20 million from the Economic Transition Support Credit of the World Bank would be used for the Baga Nuur and Sgaryn Gol Mines to improve existing operating practices, productivity, and efficiency. In mid-1993, a $20.5 million contract was awarded by the U.S. Agency for International Development to Morrison Knudsen Corp. for assisting Mongolia to improve its coal and power production. According to the Ministry of Fuel and Energy, the Government planned to increase production capacity of the Baga Nuur and the Shivee Ovvo Mines from 4 Mmt/a and 1 Mmt/a, respectively, to 6 Mmt/a and 1.5 Mmt/a, respectively, through a modernization program.

Petroleum.—Mongolia had not produced oil and gas from its Zaan Bayan Oilfield in Donogovi Aymag since 1970. All of Mongolia's requirement for refined petroleum products were met by imports principally from Russia. According to the Ministry of Trade and Industry, imports of fuels, which included gasoline, diesel, aviation fuel, fuel for boilers, and lubricants, amounted to $87 million and accounted for 24% of Mongolia's imports in 1993.

To seek technical and financial assistance from the Western World for exploring oil and gas in Mongolia, the Government through Mongol Gazryn Tos (MGT), the Mongolian state-owned petroleum company, signed two separate agreements with two foreign companies in 1993. A production-sharing contract was signed between MGT and SOCO International Oil Corp., a subsidiary of Snyder Oil Corp. of the United States, for exploring oil and gas in Tamtsag basin in Dornod Aymag of eastern Mongolia. According to the agreement, which was ratified later by the State Great Hural, SOCO was granted all rights to conduct geological and geophysical works and development oilfield in the XXII contract area (11,400 km<sup>2</sup>) in Tamtsag basin, to provide technical and economic aid to the study and development of oil in Tsagaan Els in southeastern Mongolia, and to share profits 50-50 from Tamtsag Oilfield.<sup>42</sup>

In August, MGT signed another agreement with Nescor Energy Co. of Australia granting Nescor exploration and development rights in the XIII contract area (14,600 km<sup>2</sup>) in Tsagaan Els basin in

East Gobi of southeastern Mongolia.<sup>43</sup>

Uranium.—Uranium mining in Mongolia was by a Russian company called Erdes, which operated an open pit mine on a long-term lease near Marday of Dashbalbar district in Dornod Aymag of eastern Mongolia. According to the Government of Mongolia, the Erdes' uranium mine has an annual capacity of 100,000 tons. In addition, there were two closed underground mines in the same area, both seeking investors to reopen the mines.

In December, the Ministry of Geology and Mineral Resources through the Uran Co., the state-owned uranium company, signed an agreement to explore jointly for uranium with Concord of the United States and Geologorazvedka of Russia in the Gobi region, including the Aymags of Dornodgovi, Omnogovi, Dundgovi, and Sukhbaatar. According to the agreement, Concord will control 70% of the joint venture and be responsible for funding of a $4 million geological survey of the area and be responsible for management and product marketing. The Mongolian and Russian partners will split the remaining 30% interest and be responsible for carrying out geological surveying and for uranium mining. Actual prospecting work was expected to begin in 1994.<sup>44</sup>
