

DR. D.L.N. MURTI RAO ORATION

PSYCHIATRY-PAST, PRESENT & FUTURE A PERSONAL VIEWPOINT

DINSHAW R. DOONGAJI

ABSTRACT

An overview of psychiatry during the last three decades as practised in a general teaching hospital is presented. Psychiatry as an academic subject has matured tremendously during this period. The empirical treatments of the 1950s and the 1960s which evoke nostalgic memories, have been replaced by modern methods of treatment. However, there is a need to exercise caution against the blind acceptance of new and sophisticated research findings in biological psychiatry. In spite of the bright future facing psychiatry, the identity of psychiatry as a medical discipline must be preserved at all cost. Psychiatrists should also realise the dangers of gradual fractionation and impersonalisation which threatens the speciality, and makes all possible efforts to prevent this.

Key Words : General hospital psychiatry, three decades overview

I see before me faces which are familiar and friendly. Some of you have been my students, some of you are my colleagues and some of you are my seniors. Many of you have helped me, taught me, encouraged me, challenged me and given me pleasure in countless ways over a number of years.

I would like to share with you my past memories of psychiatry as it was in the good old days of yesterday, my impressions of psychiatry as I see it today, and my hopes and fears about psychiatry as it could be in the times to come.

BACKGROUND

In 1959, I qualified MD in general medicine. I was interested in the neurosciences. I was very impressed by neurologists who could localise a lesion to half a centimetre of brain tissue in patients who had massive neurological disabilities.

But the neurologists therapeutic skill was not equal to his diagnostic skill. Except for prescribing physiotherapy or an indwelling catheter, there wasn't much that could be done for most patients. So I spent some time as a visitor in psychiatry.

The psychiatry department was about 10
