Peasants, Agrarian Socialism, And Rural Development In Ethiopia Alemneh Dejene,2019-06-04 One of the few systematic field surveys undertaken following the 1975 agrarian reform in Ethiopia this study analyzes the conditions constraining agricultural productivity of peasant farmers in the Arsi region and examines how farmers view peasant and government organizations established to attain agrarian socialism Based on data generated through interviews with farmers peasant association leaders and extension agents Dr Dejene argues that the low prices for agricultural products shortages of consumer goods and lack of improvements in farming technology are among the major obstacles to increasing output among peasant farmers The author also explores the government policy of transforming peasant associations into oollective farming units which he finds is supported by only one quarter of the farmers interviewed His study indicates that peasant institutions could best mobilize labor and resources to generate agricultural surplus and undertake conservation activities that would prevent future famine Thus the author concludes that present government efforts should emphasize strengthening the cooperative movement rather than establishing collective farming

Initially published in 1983 in association with the International Labour Organisation ILO this book is about the meaning relevance and process of agrarian reform in contemporary developing countries It includes seven detailed case studies one each on Ethiopia Peru Chile Nicaragua Iran Kerala India and West Bengal India In all the cases serious contemporary efforts were made to implement agrarian reform programmes and the case studies focus upon selected aspects of this reform process origins basic characteristics problems of implementation and immediate consequences Each region differs considerably in terms of socio economic and administrative conditions but when the reform efforts are placed in their respective historical contexts several common themes emerge which are dealt with in detail In all cases it is clear that agrarian reform is essentially a political process requiring major social movements and that piecemeal reforms will not solve the grave problems of growth distribution and poverty in the Third World
