

During the Second World War, the infantryman was required to master a greater variety of arms than any other branch of the Army. From pistols and revolvers to anti-tank guns and flame throwers, in this book, Lieutenant Colonel Barker describes and illustrates all of the many infantry weapons used by British and American forces in the Second World War, including rifles, carbines, pistols, submachine guns, machine guns, mortars, grenades, flame throwers, and anti-tank rifles. And appendices compare the weapons, their construction and performance with their German equivalents.
